

Do you care about what's happening in the world? Do you wish more people did? Help us make those connections—and make a difference!

An internship at the Pulitzer Center You never know what doors will open

The Pulitzer Center is an award-winning non-profit journalism organization in the heart of Washington, DC. We support reporting on systemic global issues critically important to our understanding of the world but too often ignored.

We work to place the stories high-end outlets, from The Washington Post, The New York Times and PRI's The World, to VICE News and NPR, as well as an array of social media.

We also create innovative educational programs to connect students, teachers and the public with the print reporters, photographers, filmmakers, radio documentarians and multimedia journalists who work with us around the globe.

Our paid interns are in the thick of it all: posting content, getting the word out on events, brainstorming on ways to broaden the reach of the journalists' work. We are a team!

Pulitzer Center internships provide excellent training for the future: Our current education, outreach and special projects coordinators all started as interns. Former interns have gone on to some amazing jobs:

-- Erin Banco became a freelance journalist with work appearing in such outlets as The New York Times, Newsweek, and Foreign Policy among others, and is now a Middle East correspondent for the International Business Times.

-- Jake Naughton went to graduate school at CUNY in New York where he became a New York Times photo intern and remains a frequent Times contributor.

-- Maura Youngman went to graduate school at the University of Michigan School of Information and did a stint at the Berkman Center at Harvard before landing at The New York Times doing UX (user) research.

Working at the Pulitzer Center is a great way to explore issues around the world, let others know about them and help launch your career. So check us out and apply today! <http://pulitzercenter.org/join-us/internships>

Any questions? Contact Ann Peters – apeters@pulitzercenter.org