

Public Health and Stigmatization in India

Image by Sami Siva

Michael Edison Hayden, an American journalist based out of Mumbai, and Sami Siva, a Canadian photographer of Indian origin, present their Pulitzer Center-supported reporting project on India's health care crisis as seen through the eyes of doctors, government officials, and activists from Mumbai, Delhi and beyond. Together, with the support of the Pulitzer Center, the journalists have also reported on transgender women living on the fringes of society and battling an epidemic of HIV/AIDS, and on the communities along the India-Pakistan border affected by a heroin epidemic.

Thursday, November 5

6:00pm

University of Pennsylvania

Williams Hall Room 723 (36th and Spruce Streets)

Refreshments Provided

The Campus Consortium partnership between the Middle East Center, South Asia Center and the Pulitzer Center features programming on campus with journalists to foster broader discussions and nuanced analysis of concerns that span disciplines and international student reporting fellowships. Fellows Priya Ramchandra and Farzana Shah will give an update on their summer 2015 reporting projects from India and Iran.

