

Everyday DC 2020: A Community of Collaboration

These images were curated by students from Hardy Middle School and placed on the same wall at the Pepco Edison Place Gallery as part of the Fourth Annual Everyday DC exhibition

Guiding Questions from the Student Curators

As you view this gallery, the curators ask you keep these questions in mind.

- What photos stand out to you?
- What stories do they tell?
- What do you learn about this community?
- How do these photos change your perceptions of Washington, D.C.?

Anonymous

Untitled

Sousa Middle School

Isabel Mackaye

Untitled

Mr. Newbold examining students' Everyday DC photography.

Hardy Middle School

Jessica Smith

Untitled

The two men are my mom's choir members, Christian (left) and Angelo (right). One of the pre-concert shenanigans displayed here is tying a bow tie. Angelo needed help with his since his hands were occupied. This is my Everyday DC because my mom has been a classical singer for years. I was just born into it!

Hardy Middle School

Latoria, Chyann, and Derrick

Love

Charles Hart Middle School

Kamiya Kelly Price, De'Erika Smith, and Rikayla Robinson

Fist Bump

We are all more powerful together than we are apart.

Excel Academy Public
Charter School

Justine Green & Jamisha Wilson

Untitled

Sousa is a good place to learn and have a fun time as well. While attending Sousa they gave me the respect and courage that I needed to succeed in my goals.

Sometimes the school can be a little rough but that's just a way of growing up. In my opinion I would recommend a family member or friend to attend Sousa. Sousa has been a good way for me to learn and grow as a young teen.

Sousa Middle School

Gabriela Melendez

Thinking Person

We will always be united no matter who we are and who we came from.

Oyster-Adams Bilingual school

Kamara Crawford

Portrait

Team work makes the dream work.

Excel Academy Public Charter School

Anonymous

Untitled

Eliot-Hine Middle School

Joe Finkelstein

Crunch

Alice Deal students venture home to sit by the fire on a cold afternoon.

Alice Deal Middle School