

Everyday DC 2020: Jefferson Middle School Academy

Arianna Payne

Shoe

Mrs. Green and her art student speaking in the background are framed by the many lines of the glass case and the framed stuff on the wall. This busy and small background acts as a balance to the large and stationary shoe. The shoe then demonstrates my interest due to its size. I am drawn in further by reading the designs drawn on the shoe. The reflected lights, framed artwork, and lines from the glass case lead my eye all around the image.

A photograph showing a large, open grassy field in the foreground. In the lower-left corner, there is a parking lot filled with various cars. Behind the field, there is a row of houses and a large, modern building complex. The sky is clear and blue.

Pedro Guevara-Benitez

The View

The day is bright and blue, and the field is a large green shape. My eye traces the black fence outline and then counts the cars in a pattern at the bottom of the image.

Jada Ashanti

View Out My Window
Makes Me Happy Like I Should Be

This powerful image is due to the dark frame outline of the window panes, and contrasted bright white reflected light forming a leading line into a beautifully blue sky with picture-perfect white fluffy clouds. We learned about the use of contrast, and the wild windy nature of the blue sky is even more contrasted to the three boring, boxing, grey government buildings framed in the bottom of the window.

Deja Burke

We're Under Construction, I'm Told
That's a Good Thing

A very typical fall school day is routinely interrupted by loud repetitive construction sounds, smells, and new views as we're expected to learn in classrooms.

Makayla Halsey

Old Post It Art, New Photography Art

We made cubes using only post-its and glue sticks, and with minimal help at the start of the school year. Now we're learning to find creative compositions in the art room: an example of leading line and pattern make this image interesting.

Frederick Cooper

Typing Leading Line

A school keyboard, view from the side to make a leading line from the little path between the letters. The letters also make a repeating pattern of shape.

Kaia Summers

A Study of Lines in the Stairs

Walking up and down these stairs every day is exhausting, now I can at least enjoy the lines as I climb. Top of the third floor, looking down.

Jacob Player

Art Class Uniformity & Being Lead

Changing your perspective makes new views for my photos even if that means laying on the ground waiting for someone's shoes to turn. We looked for leading lines made from objects not actual lines this day.

Kaia Summers

Binder Rings, A New Perspective

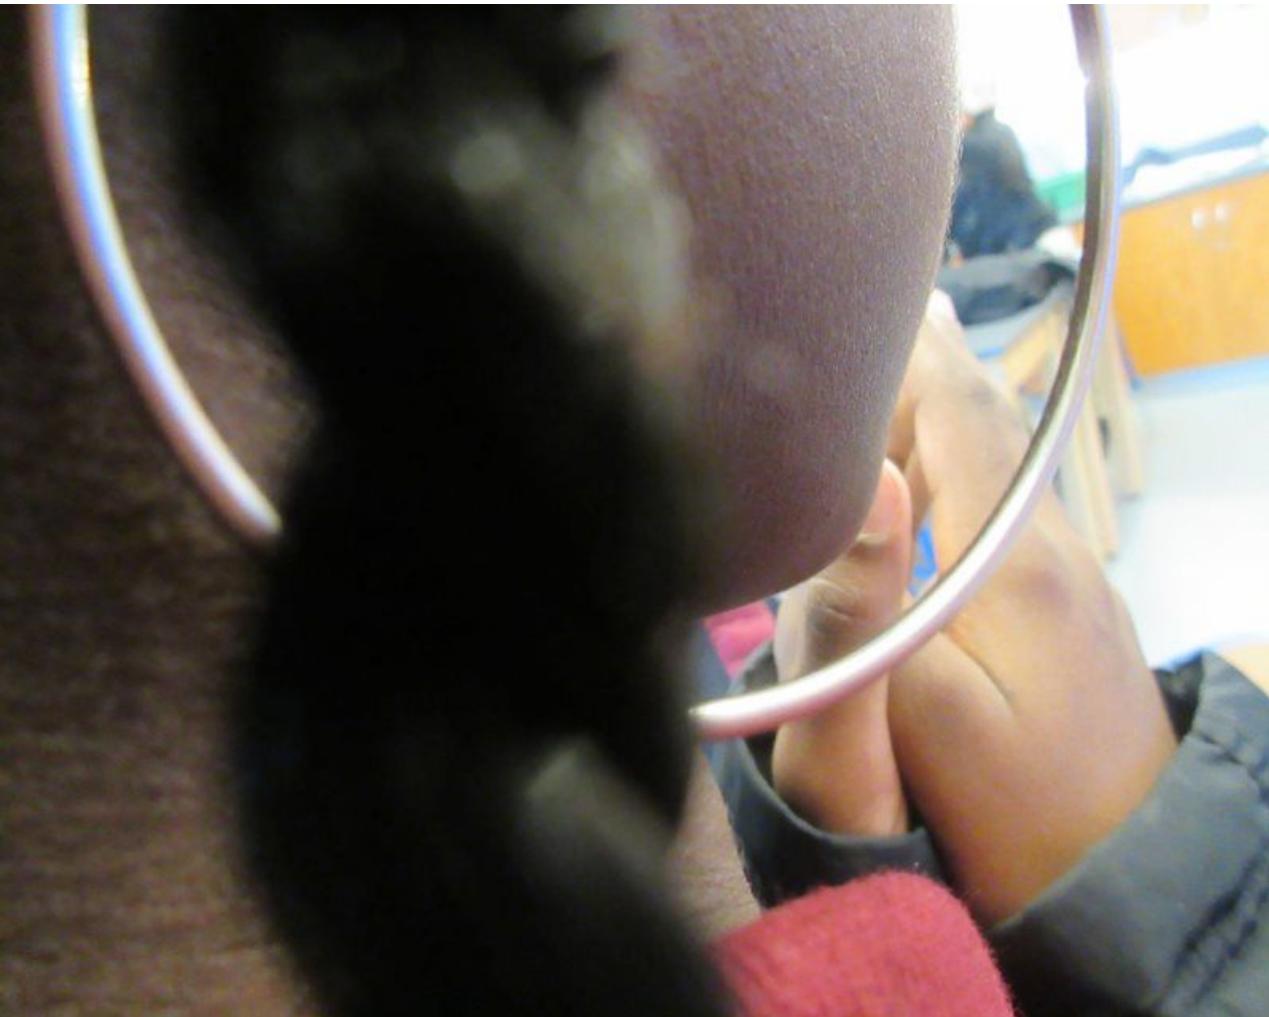

The challenge was finding examples of leading lines or identifiable shapes around the art room, and I found an example of both working together to make an interesting composition of a pretty boring object: a binder.

Loni Bent

Chinatown In Passing

The bus rushes past the Chinatown arch, and the blur of the image captures the rush I felt in the chaos of people's morning commutes. I breathe. Try to remain calm. Start the day right.

Chrishel Mitchell

Hoops

How does she wear these hoop earrings? I am so caught up in the fear of someone ripping these out of my poor little ears but tbh I would probably pull them out myself by accident!!! I can't concentrate in class and I'm not even WEARING them!

Shanti Osborne

Its-a-Box-YO!

Even the boring can look interesting when given the right light, angle, and color treatment; and also you need to open your creative eye to start perceiving everything as worth your attention.

Moyin Adeosun grade 7

I'm gonna let it SHINE~~

This light fills the whole house with a warm glow. We changed it once, to a bulb that represented daylight. The light was so bright and harsh! We changed it back to the old, not eco-friendly warm yellow light. It reminded me of bugs scurrying away from a bright light! I question my ecological footprint.

Ahmari Anderson

My View from Class

The bright blue sky is framed so beautifully in this window, it is difficult not to day dream about flying through the sky: as a pilot, a superhero, an eagle, a fighter jet. But I'm here. In class.

Johntae McFarlane

New Perspective, Same View

This is a view a dog may have if you said something the dog didn't understand. Maybe just changing your perspective means tilting your head like a dog to help solve the problem.

Anonymous

One Drawer, What Does Yours Look Like?

We studied "Dollar Street" to learn about families income all around the world. I learned that I am considered "rich" and this drawer is considered "rich" and I've never felt "rich" but now I'm at least grateful for what I have.