Student Reflections On Entire Mini-Budget Unit

Mr. Potter asked students to reflect on the following questions from the Civics / Think Tac Toe Project:

1. How did you feel about the issue before you took action and after you took action? To what do you attribute the change?
2. Do you feel good about what you did? Do you wish you did more? Something different?
3. If future students had an opportunity to engage in a similar project, what would you change? What would you keep? Why?
4. Are you likely to contribute your advocacy and organizing on this issue? Others? Why or why not?
5. Think about your own advocacy, writing and actions. How did you bear witness to injustice, how did you hold those with decision-making power accountable? How did you amplify marginalized voices throughout this project?

“To be honest I wasn't really educated about the issue before I took action. I took action by messaging the Chicago Board Of Education. Yes I feel good about what I’ve done. Although some students may have made a bigger impact by attending in person rallies, I feel like something is better than nothing. I would not change anything because I felt like it was a good project idea. We were given plenty of time and I liked the idea of working in groups. [I would] maybe [contribute my advocacy and organizing on this issue] because although it was interesting there are more important issues to advocate about. We held them accountable by having an opinion and voicing it.”

“I think that before we started this action I believed that we weren't going to be able to do much but after we took action and saw how many other students were passionate and confident about their ideas I became more interested in the assignment. I think this change was due to the desire I saw in people wanting to use the 2 billion dollars to its best use, not only students but also parents and teachers.”

“The issue of mental health has always been near and dear to me since there were many days in the past year where I was frustrated. A part of me grew to oppose adults who imposed their covid fears on kids as I found these adults to be cowardly. I saw my friends lose hope in themselves and yet they continued to try to move forward. In a year I saw riots and violence that I believe was impacted by covid restrictions, along with pain among society. The elected school board bill was more of an afterthought initially but I realized that an elected school board could actually help in mental health issues. I honestly don't feel too good about my part because I felt like I didn't do much. My part was pretty small however I did enjoy writing. In the future students should work together on one task rather than many since the unity that is needed to tackle issues is more effective that way. I certainly want to advocate for what I believe because realistically only I can use my voice. I might get a lot of pushback on my beliefs but at this point doing nothing will make me weak. The fact that the school board was not elected really blew my mind because I realized why everyone hates the education curriculum. I found it to be a complete injustice that the school board was full of people who most likely only cared about their pockets rather than people. This project gave us the tools to use for advocacy after we realized our voice had been hidden by our own selves.

“Before taking action, I felt that my voice was less effective, because I've always heard that there's voice in numbers. But after coming together with other students with similar mindsets, I realized that my voice actually had some form of influence, and I found that it wasn't as impossible as it seemed previously. I believe that I attribute the change to the push of getting out of my comfort zone, given that I have pretty severe social anxiety/fear of public speaking. I have always known that I have the potential to lead and advocate, but I always fear I'll make myself sound like a fool, but after making good research I gained more confidence & felt more well-informed of what's going on around me. My experience so far has inspired me to continue to advocate and put my voice out there. I hope to continue to advocate to ease my fear of public speaking & make genuine changes that my community can benefit with. If future students had an opportunity to engage in a similar project I’d just say it’s best everyone gets something assigned by a teacher in a group, so that everyone knows exactly what to get done. It’s just tough to have to boss around others and constantly remind them what to do, so even if there's an option to do it individually that would be great. Or if there’s a better way to keep track of each student’s contribution to the project. I advocated by reaching out to the Illinois governor about a bill & I spoke out at the youth summit & will speak today at the school board meeting to further advocate for resources for mental health. I also learned so much about the inequities and funding that will for sure help me advocate further in the future.

“ I would say that before and after I kind of felt the same mostly because this project was a little out of my comfort zone so making the posts made me a little nervous, but I knew it was something I wanted to voice my opinion on. I think overall I was just glad to get it over with. Honestly, for future students, I’m not sure that I would change anything besides maybe adding more options to pick from but I’m not sure what they would look like.I think if I was given that chance I would [advocate for change on this issue]. Through this project I was able to say how I felt about how the new budget for CPS should be used to benefit the students.”

Hey @ChiPubSchools, instead of wasting the stimulus check on useless things how about being more considerate of providing housing for the homeless, having a mental health practitioner or social worker, and a full-time school nurse:) #EducationStimmy @janicejackson @chicagosmayor
In support of the Illinois #CleanEnergyJobsAct, this is a subtle promotion of an idea that @ChiPubSchools could do with their #SchoolStimmy!!

73% of students arrested at CPS schools are black, but most schools voted to keep police. More funding for restorative justice is an alternative. More funding for counselors and restorative justice coordinators means more social-emotional support and less incarceration.

Good Evening!

I hope this email finds you well, I just wanted to share some good news with you.

The Deputy chief of staff contacted me today in the morning to let me know that he would be happy to speak with me about my ideas for the budget. I have been scheduled to speak with board member Dwayne Truss this Monday regarding my proposal for the budget plan. I am super excited but also very anxious and worried. I was wondering if you guys would help me prepare for this Monday regarding what I have to say. I have written in the document attached about the ideas that I would like to speak about. Would it be too much to ask for your help and ideas about this?

Thank you in advance!

Respectfully,

Jackie

Dear State Representative Theresa Mah,

As your constituent, I am reaching out to ask you to pass the Clean Energy Jobs Act (CEJA, HB804, SB1718) now.

The COVID-19 pandemic has thrust Illinois families and businesses into a public health and economic crisis. As we emerge from this crisis, CEJA is a part of a bold recovery effort to build a strong, equitable economy and healthier, more resilient communities.

CEJA will boost one of our fastest growing industries, clean energy, by creating new, well-paying jobs in communities where they’re needed most and reducing utility bills for families and businesses struggling to make ends meet.

For many students, their school is like a second home for them. Certainly, teachers and staff have the ability to provide a strong support system for students, whether they struggle in school or outside of school. One should never feel scared or discriminated against in their own school building, but this is, unfortunately, still the case within the Chicago Public Schools district.

Despite the fact that arrests on CPS campuses have declined in the past decade, the distribution of these arrests is still extremely skewed against African Americans. According to data from the Chicago Police Department for last school year, 73.4% of youths 21-years-old or younger who were arrested on CPS school property from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. were African American despite the fact that the same demographic makes up only 36% of the district’s student population. This means that African Americans are disproportionately arrested at a rate of over 200%. Certainly, this demonstrates a school district with a misplaced focus on correcting or disciplining students - a focus that places minority students at a disadvantage.

How is a safe school environment maintained in a healthy manner without any discrimination? Efforts to answer this question were undertaken last summer when 17 CPS schools decided to remove their School Resource Officers (SROs). But, this change is simply not enough. Underfunded schools need additional counselors and restorative justice coordinators so that student voices are heard and systemic racism is not reinforced by disciplinary actions. Uniformed officers cannot be relied upon to create a welcoming school environment — on the contrary, students throughout the district have voiced their discomfort or anxiety in being in the same building as an SRO. Students who are understood by staff members and feel welcome at school will inevitably fare better than their peers without these support systems. Counselors are crucial in providing academic, mental, and emotional support to students. Restorative justice and peer juries allow students involved in behavioral incidents to be heard by their peers and classmates — people who naturally understand them better.

CPS received nearly $2 billion in funding after the American Rescue Plan was passed by Congress and signed by President Biden. Existing inequalities within the district have been made worse by the COVID-19 pandemic, and it is essential that the district dedicate enough money to counselors, restorative justice coordinators, and other resources that students deserve.
