

Easy

Picking a job which was warehouse.
Taking the silver plan for health insurance.
Selling stuff in my house

Hard

buying my kid
thrift store clothing
instead of namebrand.

First off, my job was a warehouse job, for 14 bucks an hour. It was an inbetween job. The harder choices were the ones that involved my kid and their well being. If the choices pertained to me I would ignore them.

I chose a warehouse job for 14$ an hour.
So I was making 300 a week but then my boss gave me a choice to switch from my hourly pay to a pay to piece deal.

I chose to keep my hourly pay but my boss cut my hours by half. I had to skip out on a trip and buy Christmas food.

I let a homeless dude stay at my house for 200 dollars, but when my daughter needed something
and I had the money I gave it to her.
My mom needed food so I gave it to her and I still had 400$ and then got my paycheck. I left my job the whole time and tried to apply for workers Comp but my boss laughed at me. At the end of the month I had 300 dollars left over.
