11/18/2020 11:34:42				I feel that it is vert interesting to learn about the unheard stories. I believed they should be discussed further and the main news should bring publicity to them.	The story about how the people who migrate from place to place have no where to stay and/or go.	It really made me feel upset. I felt this way because I feel that COVID-19 took a lot from us, especially the ones who did not have much to begin with.	I really liked hearing the story about the face mask that is shaped as a birds head.	I really liked reading these! I feel that with it being in the past we can look back at it and see how it is the same and also see the things that we have greatly improved on.	I feel that they are similar because they both have killed many people and it is lasting for a very long time period.	I would be to be sure and interview the people that people that might be more affected than others, such as the homeless or immigrants.	I really liked learning about the under-rated stories.
11/18/2020 11:49:48					It was interesting that global warming isn't talked about. We're more focused on who won the American election that the garbage and water levels that increase.	I feel frustrated because they are just as important. We need to focus on the abuse of immigration and people affected by COVID.	The torture and execution of Jews. People trusted a rumor without any evidence from other sources.	I felt sad. So many people died for something they most likely didn't do.	We don't discuss the execution and imprisonment of immigrants, like he torture of Jews.	I can speak to people in my community and share my opinions.	I liked learning about the Black Death. It was fun to relate current events to old events.
11/18/2020 13:29:46				I think they should be discussed more because they give us a personal insight on broader issues.	The corona virus one because we are currently still dealing with it.	I'm just glad that I wasn't a heavily impacted by many of these things and I feel bad for the people who were.	The killing of the Jews because they were killing a lot of their population based off of their assumptions	A lot of the people were savages and very emotionless to people who were different from them	In the current stories stories all people weren't as cruel	I could give the teenage community a positive outlook on the pandemic and also use social media as a positive outlet to relieve stress.	My favorite part was just being able to read the under reported stories because it gives me a different perspective on things
11/18/2020 14:14:22				My view is that journalist are a big part for people to share their stories. Also how they are big impact and helpful for people stories to be on the news.	Yes, there was one that was talking about how some people took this pandemic a different way. It even told us some people enjoyed this pandemic because of all the things they could catch up on.	I felt informative because of all the new information I got from old time periods stories. Some narratives presented other people that are not living no more voices. He presented the action and how they would do something.	Not that I could remember, but I can say that they did talk about how the time was in that time period. I remember I read about how different people culture affected others.	I felt pretty good about myself catching up on how different time periods are different and they also have things in common as of today's time.	They are both under-reported stories and they are about things that can affect us or things that inform us about a certain time period. Under-reported stories can even tell us how peoples lives where in those time periods.	I can use my voice to make a video and put it on social media so other people can hear and spread the video around. Also to tell them to be careful and try to not go out as much so they wont get affected by the virus.	We learned about different journalist and how they helped others stories to get noticed.
11/18/2020 15:26:20				I learned that you can learn more about a topic. Also that many detail are fully told when looking at a non under reported story.	yes, that many illegal immigrants are given housing and the proper health care just because there are from another country.	Most of the stories made me upset because they were about racism and immigrants that wanted to start a new life but covid didnt let them.	Yes. A lot of the stories were about the many of the authors perspective on the black death.	Most of them were hard to understand. Many of them were there opinion on there own situations.	They are different. The ones today are worded different and give a better perspective.	Give people a better insight. I would tell them things that there missing out on when reading about the pandemic.	My favorite part was reading the older under reported stories. It let me look at how they dealt with the black death.
11/18/2020 15:57:56				My view on under-reported stories is that they are reports that can save millions or lifes or bring things into the light.	A under-reported story that stuck out to me was when the flu struck and killed millions of people, but the world was focused on WW1 to notice that so many were dying. The Corona Virus was also ignored up until it hit the country despite there being clues on what was coming.	At first I was confused at different information was being thrown at me from reading either different articles, or different topics. My brain was trying to switch from the topics and it gave me a headache at first but then I got used to the transitioning of topics.	Definitely the ones that explained the different torturing methods. Its kind of dark but its nice to know what tools were used and how they were used when torturing a person.	While some were probably under-reported stories, there are still some things that were never talked about but were brought up anyway. For example, what 'crimes' did the people commit or how they felt in those times.	After reading some of the articles, I can share some of the information I learned with my parents or siblings since I have a hard time talking to different people. They can then spread the word of what they learned.	My favorite part was all the death and torturing that took place during the Black Plague. Its morbid and terrible of me to enjoy these type of things, but I find it enjoyable to learn about these type of things. Instead of these things bringing me down or upset me, its nice and kind of funny to read these thing. (Again terrible of me I know. Its just how I grew up.)
11/18/2020 16:16:35				I think they are extremely important.	The one about the migrant family being separated.	I felt that many people did not understand the importance of them.	The one about how the Catholic church blamed the Jews.	I felt sad for the unjust death of the Jews.	People suffer but many people do not notice it.	I will try to convince others the importance of an under-reported-story.	The interview because it allowed me to understand how they felt.
11/18/2020 16:18:28				I think a lot of the stories that we covered need to be brought to light along with a lot more. It is sad that barley anyone is getting these stories to the public.	The "Rat Tribe" story really made me think about the Beijing government and how they will fit it.	I felt sad because I know a lot of these stories will go under-reported. These stories will lack the attention they need to help many people in need.	No because I knew that there where a lot of mixed opinions and emotions during this pandemic. There was a lack of knowledge on the situation so a lot of people didn't know what to do.	I felt sad and conflicted knowing that innocent people where getting executed and there was still know known information on this pandemic at the time.	They involved a lot of murder from the public and this was known all over European countries. Today there are so many sad stories that they get pushed to the way back, so no one sees them	I will try to help those in need during this pandemic and have an open mindset on certain situations.	I liked how I was able to see the voiceless and get a little more knowledge for some of the people living in this pandemic.
11/18/2020 18:33:31				I feel like under-reported stories are just as important as reported stories.	the story of the struggling mom because I know a lot of people have to go through similar things especially with the pandemic going on	some of them can be very sad and scary. They can be like this because sometimes they will lack the attention they need to help many people in need.	the story that stuck put to me the most was when they tied astrology to the plague.	I feel kinda sad because many people died.	they are very similar because a lot of people died and the virus was very unfamiliar when introduced.	I can make articles or tell people about these under reported problems.	my favorite part was learning about what other people had to go through and relating to them.
11/18/2020 19:16:57				My views on under-reported are that these stories should be more publicized than the stories on the news right now. What I learned about these stories that they are more interesting and detailed than others.	An unreported story that stuck out to me was the one with being rat tribe and the lady taking photographs of other citizens in China. What stuck out to me was the fact that this wasn't recognized and that under reported story.	I feel like I should read these stories more since they are so informational and interesting.	The black death	I felt surprised and shocked this wasn't as popular and recognized story. Like I personally haven't learned about this topic but I have heard about it.	It is similar to the pandemic we have today because this is causing many deaths with similar symptoms like coughing nausea and fever. This is different because Corona hasn't killed as many people as of right now and this isn't as deadly as the black death was.	By spreading the word to others.	My favorite part of the lesson was our assignment I thoroughly enjoyed it and wish we can do more things like this.
11/18/2020 22:20:46				My view on under reported stories is that they are just as important as stories reported to the media.	I still really like the story about the Beijing rat tribe and I might do more research on that because its not a common story you see everyday.	I felt that these under-reported stories cover some things that never even cross some people's minds they're the type of stories that trigger emotions like empathy and joy rather than fear.	The story about how jews were being murder for a crime people couldn't prove was caused by them. It made me think alot about how much race and religion mattered to people in those times	I felt the same as when I read the recent under-reported stories, because I just feel that if a story was created there had to be a reason, so why not just publish it to the media like every other story.	In both time periods there were rumors spread that couldn't be proven scientifically with fact, but were accumulated based on assumptions and beliefs, which were created out of spite.	I could create a blog and post under reported stories connected to the media reported stories and spread awareness to certain issues people are over looking.	My favorite part of the lesson was the interview, because I had to do research on certain occupations and how they were different back then they are now, which was quite interesting.
11/19/2020 16:25:02				They deserve more attention.	Not really.	That sucks because those things are not good like calling people rats just because they live under buildings.	The torturing one.	I was shocked because pretty much everything they talked about would never be allowed now.	The things happening back then were very severe and are not allowed now and the things now are more advanced then back then.	Posting about it, telling others about it, trying to join organizations to stop those things.	Learning about the medieval times.
11/20/2020 0:21:46				Some stories need to be told to the public to bring awareness. Most under-reported stories are sometimes more important than the stories that are getting more attention. Under-reported stories could bring insight and knowledge on topics that they do not know about. This can change peoples' lives for the better.	An under-reported story from current day that stuck with me is the immigrants that are suffering from the covid-19 outbreak. Families are being removed from their homes and have nowhere to go. Also the detention centers are hot spots for infections because of the high population there.	I felt sad and sympathetic towards the people who were telling their stories. I also felt surprised because I was never acknowledge on the fact that people went or going through these things and we were not taught or told about it. I feel sympathetic towards the families going through a hard time during these times. It makes me more appreciative of what I have.	A story that stood out to me is the persecution of the Jews during the Black Death based on a rumor. I think that it is unnecessary to take the lives of innocent people because of false information brought by hatred.	Its sickening and unfair that people would be treated that way. For example the Jews were persecuted, massacred, and taken away from their families because misinformation stating that they committed a crime they did not commit. People believed that they poisoned rivers and lakes to spread the disease on purpose. They were taken and tortured to confess to the crimes unfairly.	I the under-reported stories are similar to today because since the Carona virus started in china their have been racial discrimination and division towards the Asian communities in america. Some people they are to blame for the cause of the virus based on their ethnicity. This is like the persecution of the Jews because they were accused of spreading the plague.	I might use my voice to speak out and tell the stories of the people who are not getting enough attention from the people. I will find stories and give people knowledge on topics and experience social media and news anchors do cover.	My favorite part of the lesson was reading different stories from people involved in these pandemic recent or earlier. I appreciate the knowledge that I was given on the suffering and experiences people of different ethnic backgrounds have gone through during these pandemics.

11/20/2020 0:25:08				Now that I have learned about under-reported stories, I have developed an interest and a whole new curiosity about under-reported stories. It has made me see news stories in a different way and it has made me wonder if what they show is all there is to that event. A lot of the times our sources don't give us the whole story nor do they give us every side of the story so the parts that may need attention are often missed. Under-reported stories need to be told to shed light on the events that get ignored in daily news simply because people are able to control what's being said and put out to the public.	The video that covered Covid-19 coverage in the early days of the spread of the virus really stuck out to me because it is still an ongoing thing. In the past, there had been quite a few warnings of a possible global pandemic but people turned a blind eye. Evidently, there have been major consequences and the most vulnerable have suffered immensely and the virus is still actively spreading. It had been discovered that the most affected were people of color, undocumented immigrants, and students. After the spread of the pandemic, they have suffered from primarily housing issues, insufficient health information, and discrimination. I found it interesting and yet confusing that even in times of struggle, discrimination played a part in the issue.	It was odd to know that such a relevant topic that gets covered nearly every day had missed and didn't represent the different sides of this story. Covid-19 has affected everybody but each day, we only get statistics and brief comments instead of seeing the people behind those statistics and their perspectives on the matter and how it has affected them. In several of the articles, it could be seen that the most affected were ethnic minorities such as Mexicans and Asian Americans. They had been struggling with housing issues, living in crowded and in places where Covid-19 could spread easily, along with discrimination that often led them to not wanting help if they had contracted the virus. It is horrible that the most affected aren't covered considering that they are making up most of the statistics that get represented every day.	The document that covered the falsely accused Jews stuck out to me the most. The perspectives of the Jews themselves were not being heard and I found it interesting given the fact that they were being killed and tortured after being accused of bringing the Bubonic Plague. They had been under people of power and hated so they were most likely poor and their voices were left unheard and ignored leading to thousands of people being executed. With the black death, they solely based the spread on Jews although when researching, it can be found that it was just transported by a bacterium, insects, and rodents. This was simply because back then they were severely ethnocentric and discriminatory because they had misrepresentation of reality that often was reflected from their religious perspectives and beliefs. This didn't surprise me because they had wanted people to blame and before the plague, they had discriminated against Jewish people.	When reading the stories and hearing about all the bad things they had done to Jews and the poor in the 1300s, I was I surprised. Back then in Europe, they had a feudal system in which there was one lord, and everyone else was below him and worked for him not to mention they were quite anti-semitism and their views were strongly persuaded by their Christian religious beliefs. They showed ethnocentrism and nationalism so early and it reflected the way they treated Jewish people and poorer people so of course, they wouldn't factor in how they were feeling whenever they made their actions. It was inevitable. For example, Christians who are said to have been corrupted by the Jews made confessions supporting the claim and they were believed simply because they had the same religion as those in power. Jews were killed and burned for the crime and they related it back to God saying they died and were damned forever as they were "plotting the extinction of his church". Although it was wrong, it's all they knew at the time.	In the under-reported stories from the Black Death, the oppressed and most affected were not represented. In the Black Death's case, the poor and the Jewish people who had been blamed had been killed and prosecuted after being accused of bringing the virus were not represented. This relates to one of the under-reported stories from Covid-19 in which it stated that Asian Americans had been the most affected by the spread of the virus and systematic racism was to blame. It all falls under discrimination and rumors. In the 1300s when the plague began, Jewish people were hated because of their different religious beliefs, and to have someone to blame, they blamed the Jews and the people under the people in charge. So, they were falsely accused without any solid evidence, and for that, they were tortured and killed. In the article that covered Asian-Americans point of view, it was mentioned that people on the outside looking in assume that the Asian Americans are well off due to how hard they work but in reality, the pandemic has placed them in several hardships and it has made it hard to survive. With these rumors and misinformation, many have suffered and lost their lives.	Whenever I can, I try to spread posts or credible and important posts that display information that should be known to the public on my social media. But also, I want to try to find these stories and be more observant of certain topics. To use my voice to serve under-reported stories during the pandemic, I would first have to educate myself on the matter by asking questions, conducting interviews, and following up with my own personal research for articles, news stories, and perhaps even YouTube videos in order to get a clear understanding of the message I am looking to spread.	My favorite part of the lesson had to be conducting the fake interview. The articles that covered the Bubonic plague never told the side of those being accused of bringing the disease and in particular, Jewish people. So, in my interview, I tried to tell understand a Jewish person's point of view during the plague and explained how they felt, how it affected them and their families, and how they handled the situation. It was a merit to be able to tell an under-reported story because the perspectives of the Jewish had not been represented. They were the ones being captured, tortured, burned, and killed for being accused of spreading the virus through poisoning wells and rivers and since they were below people of power and often hated by their neighbors, their voices were left unheard and ignored leading to thousands of people being executed.
11/22/2020 19:11:20				I believe almost all stories maybe even not as important should be shown and talked about that under reported stories are not heard enough and deserve more attention because they are just as important as any other story.	The one with the natives who were treated unfairly stuck with me because they definitely dont deserve that and I have a very passionate hatred toward rape and molestation and abuse/harassment in general	I felt angered because some people dont think of how the other side feels and they just do what they want because they dont care about others	the story of the Jews who were forced to confess to poisoning the rivers stuck out to me because I hate when people find someone to blame for natural problems because they just want to stop being worried so they take out their anger and fear on lower people or just people who are different	i felt as if throughout all time not one time everyone was treated equally and there will always be someone or some people who are treated as less than others such as Jews back then african americans later and still now but not as much and even sometimes asians now are treated differently because people assume they have corona because it started in china	They are similar because back then they looked for people to blame and didnt want to believe it was natural and it was and now we didnt make a big deal of it before it was too late and they are different because it is much deadlier then so most stories then would probably be about death while now its mostly about infections and how we are separated	I could try and gather people to try to make a big impact on the stories that arent talked about as much and could make speeches or videos or comments about what people probably dont know about	My favorite part was trying to figure out what I would ask and say to someone from way back then because its challenging thinking of what to say because of your curiosity
11/22/2020 22:40:06					no	that people complain about their everyday life but dont realize the danger of the doctors and scientist who work with the possibility of catching Covid much more than the everyday person	The women were not always respected and treated fairly	it was a much more tough time to deal with without all the technology and new studies of medicine	they are similar because not everyone understood the different level of struggle other people had to go through to stay alive	actually help people understand the struggle everyone is going through and try and help others	learning about the small details about the people and doctors and how their lived were at stake
11/22/2020 22:54:52				I seen a story about	I seen a story about police brutality in Germany.	Some of the stories during modern day, like the story about police brutality in Germany they need to inform other countries instead of just Europe.	Probably the Black Death, because I got to learn more information about it.	I feel like some of those stories should have been reported, to inform more people about it. Like the Black Death needed to be warn for the community, because millions of people have died in the end.	The Black Death didn't have the strongest resources like we do now.	By reporting to local news channels, so they can inform the community.	Learning about under-reported stories, because I got to research more stories I have never heard about.
