Summary of Article - Whole Group

The whole article was talking about the harsh journey that immigrants had to go through whilst trying to enter the US. UCLA's Latino Policy and Politics Institute, explained in a 2014 study that "beyond the dangers of the trains themselves, Central American migrants are subject to extortion and violence at the hands of the gangs and organized-crime groups that control the routes north." Also that applying for asylums is something yet another trial the migrants must face. After leaving dangerous neighborhoods, they continue to suffer from violence throughout the often months-long journey to the U.S southern border. It might not be the first trial that most migrants face but it's definitely there.

Social Imperative - Group

1. Immigrants make mistakes. We should be aware of why they're coming to the U.S. We should listen to what they have to say and not just punish them immediately without any explanation or evidence.
2. The U.S needs to have more sympathy for other people who we can call foreigners. The people in the U.S are also in charge for all this behaviour because of all their actions, rebellious in some parts. But the kind-hearted people can change the U.S.
